PREDICTIONS

How the Harbinger staff's biggest sports fans think this season will go

IN THE LAST eight seasons, the Chiefs have made it to seven playoffs, won six AFC West titles in a row — two AFC Championships — and won the 54th Super Bowl. But the competition in our division has improved. Plus, we lost core players like wide receiver Tyreek Hill and safety Tyran Mathieu. There's a chance we'll lose more than we did the past four seasons, but — with stronger competition — we shouldn't have to go 12-5 to win the AFC West, making me confident we can get to the Superbowl again.

IN THE OFFSEASON, the Chiefs made some major moves. Despite losing Tyreek Hill and Tyran Mathieu — key offensive and defensive players — the Chiefs lucked out in the draft, picking up players like Skyy Moore, George Karlaftis, Trent McDuffie and Isiah Pacheco. The Chiefs' division has also improved, with Russell Wilson joining the Broncos and the Raiders adding Devonte Adams. Still, the Chiefs' new rookies should provide an edge to win the division. With Patrick Mahomes and Travis Kelce returning with a sour taste in their mouths after the AFC Championship loss, I am confident that we will win the Superbowl.

THE CHIEFS HAVE been performing well for a while now, winning six AFC titles in a row along with two AFC Championships and a Superbowl. How could we not have another strong year? The team has a solid defense, along with some studs on offense — obviously including Patrick Mahomes and Travis Kelce — but losing Tyreek Hill will weaken our offense. After an encouraging first win against the Arizona Cardinals, I predict the team's record will be around 11-6. Though the Chiefs are set up for a promising season with a chance at the Superbowl, I doubt they'll win it this year.
